PARIS, Feb. 10.—President Wilson's return to the United States will be followed by closer relations between him and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, according to all Indian-

The President realizes that the situation depends very much on the attitude the Senate takes toward the League of Nations plan, upon which the whole treaty is to be based. It

It is apparent that the President is considering the cultivation of friendlier relations with the Senate committee upon which he must rely if the treaty is to go through.

From remarks dropped by the President's friends it is not unlikely that he will invite the whole committee to dinner, or to a conference, to go over the entire matter of peace, and incidentally to take up and explain each article of the league constitution, which he hopes will be

May Convene New Congress.
The President, it is indicated, will not oppose an extra session of Congress if the Republicans indicate a desire to have one. He will in fact be willing to convene the new Congress at once if the domestic situation apparently demands it, but would then let the session go on while he returned to Paris.

The President, Premier Lloyd

George and Premier Orlando have reached an agreement to return here in March, feeling it is absolutely necessary to resume the big ten meetings with each leader present in person.

able to summon the Germans to the conference during the first week in April, provided he is able to return here several weeks before that time. Fears that this phase of the Peace Conference will be protracted are based largely on the apparent stiffness based largely on the apparent strengthening of attitude of the Germans toward the armistice terms since the defeat of the Spartacists. The French press teems with articles on this subject, indicating fear of a rejuvenated Germany.

Delays Benefit Germany.

This also is leading to a demand that the conference get down immediately to the actual treaty, every month of delay giving Germany an opportunity to further recuperate. The French are not alone in this.

If the President's league plan is held up much longer it undoubtedly will result unfavorably for him, but the President has shown a driving power that has been a source of won-

This will relieve the conference of the duty of solving some of the knottiest of the fourteen points, like disarmament and freedom of the seas and the boundary questions. The reference of many of these questions to the league will relieve the conference of a lot of work, although much de-

French View Not Shared.
Evidently the British and Americans do not share the French view that the news from Germany is ominous. The Americans take the view that the Germans are economically helpless now, and that with the economic weapon in the hands of the Allies they can force the Germans to sign within ten days if necessary. Germany has not a pound of copper, and without this and other raw materials her manufacturing classes are willing to do anything to get the blockade lifted, while the Allies guarantee as soon as she signs the treaty.
